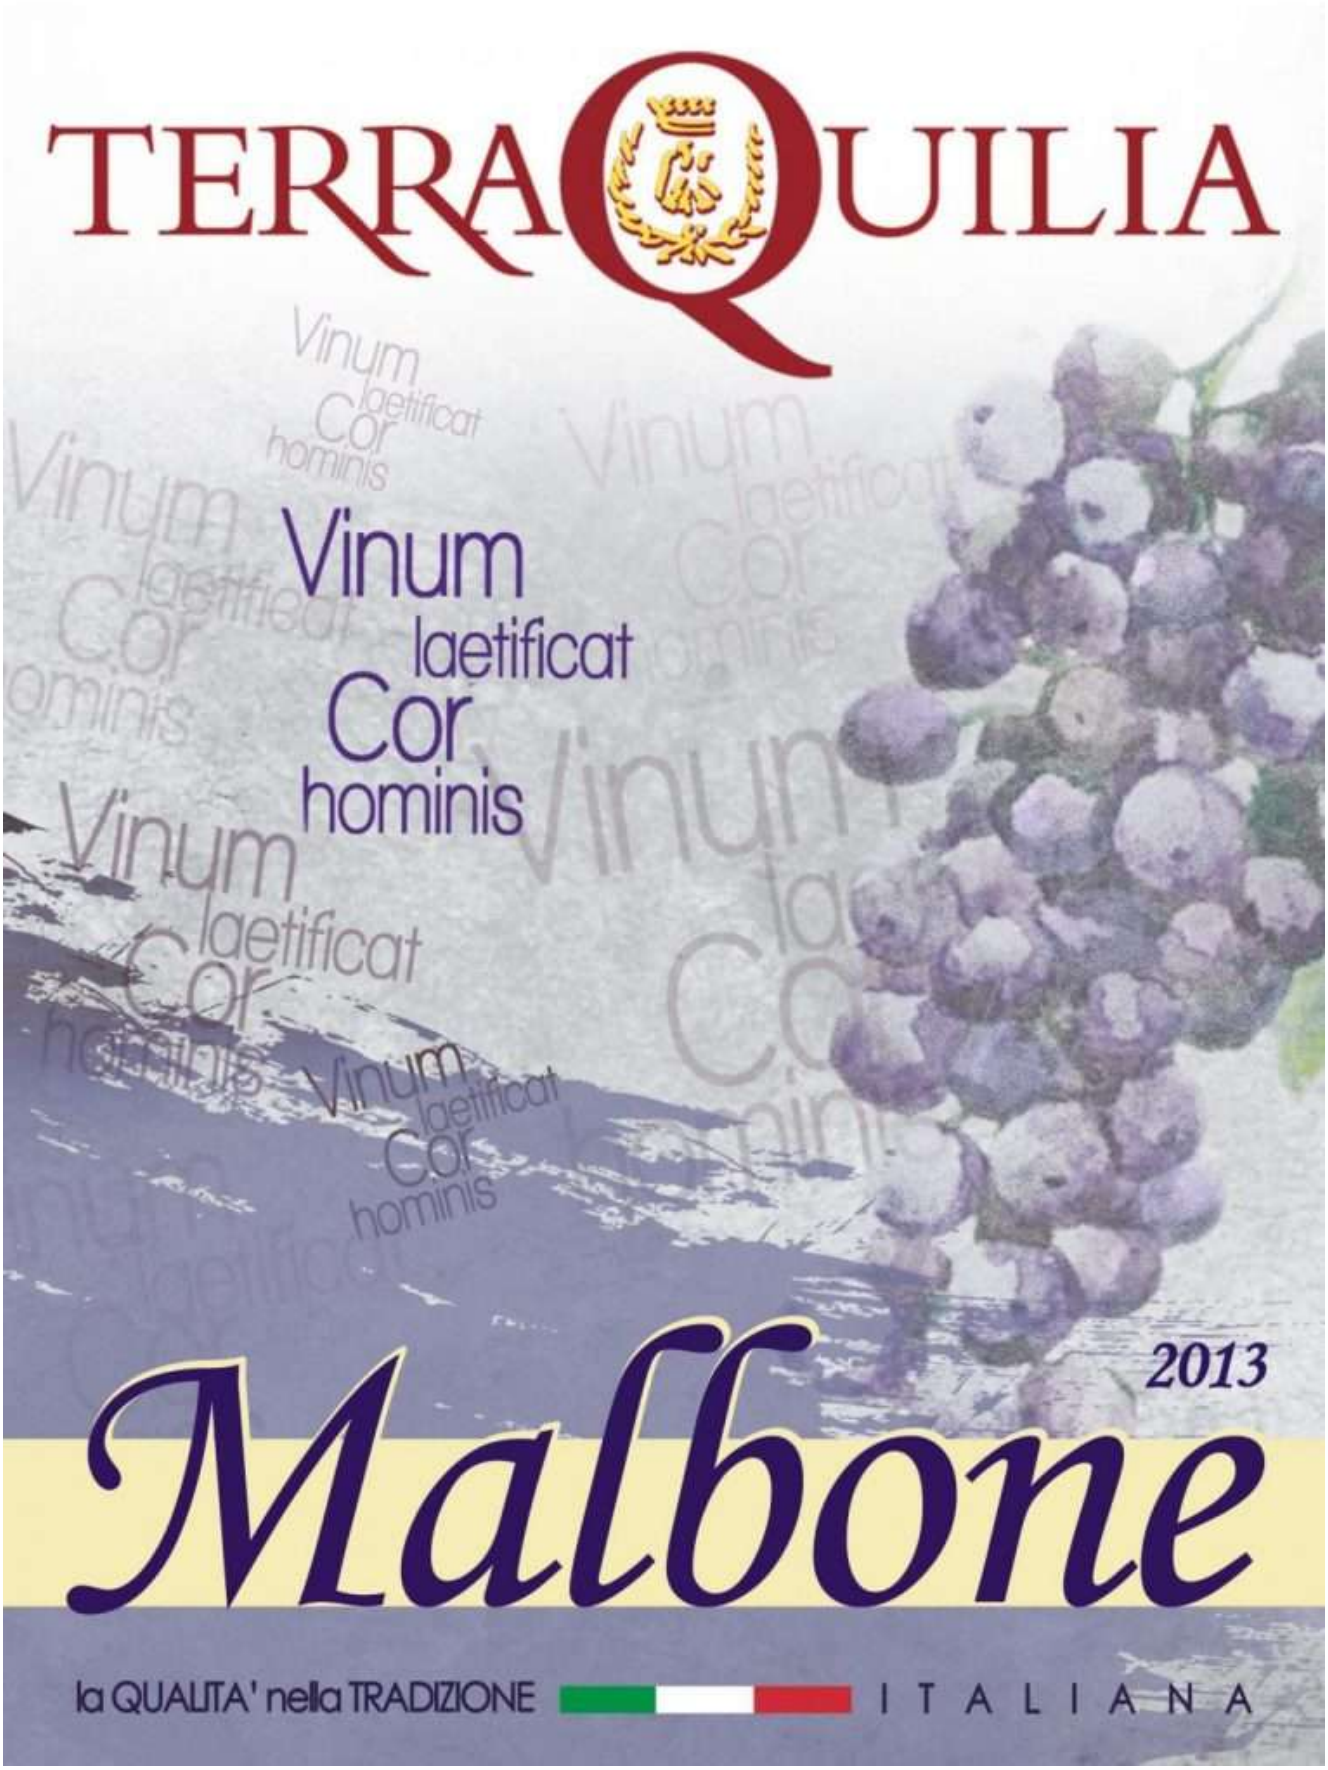
Italian Wines in the World: Malbone of Terraquilia

scritto da Redazione Wine Meridian | 11 Marzo 2016



Terraquilia

The wine cellar is located in a pristine area at approximately 450 m a.s.l. in Guiglia (MO). It produces bottled natural, secondary-fermentation wines and has a production philosophy that has ancient roots and enhances the organoleptic characteristics of the vineyards: the ancestral method. All the wines feature low sulphite content, which make them a natural and healthy wine.

The Terraquilia winery can be found in the high hills of the Emilian terroir famous for its Lambrusco, and it stands out for having used a decisively traditional production philosophy. Malbone expresses a very personal aromatic character, where the more usual hints of blackberryand blueberry take their place alongside hints of sweet spices, wet soil, geraniums, smoke, coffee and chocolate in a mix where the tannins, still developing, are controlled by a soft flavour that closes richly and bitterly. Enjoy it with traditional tagliatelle with meat sauce.
