Italian wines in the world: Mandrarossa’s Urra Mare

scritto da Redazione Wine Meridian | 11 Luglio 2020

The wind that welcomes us in this part of Sicily near Menfi can be listened to and smelled, because the richness of the stories related to this territory and the scents that come from the sea are one with the scenic beauty of these places.

A Sauvignon, with the beautiful name “Urra di Mare”, is produced near Menfi, it is almost a hymn of joy to the beauty that unites all the senses of those who visit these places.

The wine from Sauvignon grapes, harvested in the first week of August, thanks to the so-called “cold chain”, expresses all the main quality elements of this variety, with the fundamental difference of the personality of the land on which it is grown.

We know that what we drink for the most part is the characteristic of the composition of the soils and here, combined with the Mediterranean breezes, they come together to give light to a Urra di Mare that has little to envy to the most famous Sauvignons of northern Italy.

A beautiful yellow color with small greenish reflections, brings the “marine” notes mixed with aromatic herbs and white-fleshed fruit to the nose, leaving a nose finish that pushes towards the citrus.

We find all these perfumes, in the form of taste, with the mineral boost that gives a good length of drink.

Freshness and Sicilian culture, for a modern and well-made wine, suitable to be accompanied with vegetable timbale and pasta with fish sauce. Served as an aperitif, it opens up the radiance and richness of the land where it grew.
